mands of today's user. John F. Kennedy, Pope John XXIII, Mao Tse-tung, Martin Luther King, J. D. Salinger, and John Kenneth Galbraith are among authors of recent familiar quotations who make their first appearance in this edition. The number of quotations from scientific and technological fields and from other cultures, including the Far East, has increased to reflect the remarkable expansion of our interests in the last ten years. New translations that conform to modern standards have replaced outdated ones. Every effort has been made to correct textual errors.

Authors and their works are arranged in chronological order, so that unlike books arranged alphabetically or topically, Bartlett supplies quotations in the context of the author's work and period. An alphabetical index of authors assures quick location of any of the 2250 authors and major collective or anonymous works (for example, the Bible) included in this edition. The expanded index to the text leads easily to quotations on every possible subject, as well as to the particular quotation sought but inadequately remembered. The introduction also provides a guide to help the reader make the best use of this vast treasure house.

For statesmen, speakers, writers, students, teachers, ministers, for lovers of literature and the word — for anyone, indeed, of great or little learning, the Fourteenth Edition of Bartlett's Familiar Quotations offers infinite riches.
